Jessica Margo was born and raised in Watsonville, CA, where she started dancing at Steps Dance Studio. Training in Ballet, Jazz, Tap, Hip Hop, and Contemporary, Jessica fell in love with dance instantly. She was on the competition team with Steps and then with Pacific Arts Complex. During this time she attended numerous conventions with world renowned choreographers. After high school, Jessica broadened her dance education at the American Musical and Dramatic Academy with a professional certification in dance. At AMDA she was introduced to Modern, Broadway, Heels, Fosse, Dancing for the Camera, Dance History and Industry, as well as networking, acting, vocal coaching, and nutritional classes. At college she performed in company shows and worked with Nicole Berger, Katherine Tokarz, Yusuf Nasir, Stephanie Landwehr, and many more influential choreographers. After graduation she was signed with Movement Talent Agency and has had amazing experiences working with different artists and choreographers in both music videos and live shows. Jessica has worked with Dana Wilson, Issac Ravishankara, Ari Robbins (the steadicam for La La Land), G Madison, Eplus Productions, ABC Freeform, and has shot for Red Bull. She also had the pleasure of choreographing LEADR's music video, "11:11" which was featured in Billboard for the artistic direction and choreography. Jessica also trained under So You Think You Can Dance's very own Chehon-- the owner of I Am Force in LA, in their jazz program. In addition to training and performing, Jessica has a huge passion for teaching dance and helping young students grow. She's so excited to be back home with everyone and to be doing what she loves!
